KANSAS LEGISLATIVE INSIGHTS NEWSLETTER | FEBRUARY 2, 2018

ONCE IN A BLUE MOON

Is being sworn in as governor on the same day as a full eclipse of a “blue moon” (second full moon in the same month) a good or bad omen? Dr. Jeff, now Governor, Colyer will soon find out. That full eclipse took place shortly before 7 a.m. on Wednesday morning, and Colyer was sworn in as governor at just past 3 p.m. that afternoon.

The new governor inherits a much more stable revenue situation than was the case over the past two years. Sales and income tax receipts for the State General Fund (SGF) have exceeded estimates for several months now, and tax revenues for January exceeded expectations by $163 million. The dramatic increase this month was due mostly to early filings by taxpayers wanting to put themselves in the best position possible with the new federal tax act.

In his remarks after taking the oath of office, Governor Colyer did not reveal any big policy plans for the remainder of this year but did pledge to work on solving the school finance stalemate as soon as possible. This morning he announced four cabinet changes as well as numerous staff appointments. The most prominent change involved Nick Jordan, who served for several years as Secretary of Revenue and interim Secretary of Commerce under former governor Sam Brownback. Governor Colyer will be delivering a quasi-State of the State address to a joint session of the legislature next Wednesday where he will undoubtedly discuss numerous policy recommendations.

The governor did meet with the Republican and Democrat leaders of the House and Senate yesterday but did not discuss specific legislation with them, nor did he reveal the names of people he is considering to fill the now vacant office of Lt. Governor. He indicated there is no rush to do so and that appointment may not occur for weeks.

A VERY DELIBERATE PACE

Four weeks of the 2018 legislative session have come and gone and meaningful actions have been few and far between. Slow starts are not uncommon for legislative sessions, but this session has been unusually slow. There have been a few mostly non-controversial bills passed by at least one house, but major issues or big budget decisions are still languishing in committee.

Kansans should expect more of the same until there is some movement on the mother of all controversial issues - school finance. The disagreements on the subject among legislators and the differences between legislators, the State Board of Education, and the Kansas Supreme Court show no signs of abating. More problems arose last week when a post audit report showed that tens of millions of state dollars have been granted for many years to several of the state's largest school districts without any statutory authority to do so. This revelation will only slow the process of finding a workable solution even further.

Legislators certainly have plenty of other issues to debate and vote on such as firearms control, Medicaid (KanCare) eligibility, economic development programs, state water plans, workers compensation, etc., but any legislation that has a significant price tag will not see much movement until a bill or resolution on school finance has been presented to the governor.

Deadlines for school finance studies to be completed and legislation to be drafted are rapidly approaching, but there are few, if any, public signs of progress on this all-consuming issue. The Supreme Court has threatened, as it has in the past, to close down schools if the legislature doesn't present a constitutional funding plan by the end of June.
