KANSAS LEGISLATIVE INSIGHTS NEWSLETTER | JANUARY 20, 2026

LEGISLATIVE SESSION OPENS WITH JUDICIARY, EDUCATION, AND TAX ISSUES IN FOCUS

The 2026 Kansas legislative session opened with early attention on the courts, education policy, and tax issues, as lawmakers moved quickly into substantive work during the first week.

New Kansas Supreme Court Chief Justice Eric Rosen and Gov. Laura Kelly both addressed joint sessions of the Kansas Legislature this week, delivering the State of the Judiciary and the State of the State, respectively, along with the governor presenting her final budget proposal.

Committees also moved quickly into policy hearings. The Senate Education Committee heard extensive testimony on SB 302, which would require school districts to restrict student use of personal electronic communication devices during instructional time and limit employee-student communication through social media. Supporters cited classroom focus and student well-being, while opponents raised concerns related to local control and implementation.

On the House floor, debate on a bill addressing the authority of international organizations in Kansas shifted toward federal immigration enforcement following an attempted amendment related to U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement. The amendment was ruled not germane, but the exchange highlighted early partisan divisions during floor debate.

Property tax policy also emerged early, as lawmakers considered SCR 1616, a proposed constitutional amendment that would cap annual increases in residential assessed value. Testimony reflected disagreement over whether the proposal would provide meaningful property tax relief or shift tax burdens to other property classes.

With hearings and floor debates already underway, the opening week signaled an active legislative calendar ahead. Additional coverage on the governor's speech, budget, and State of the Judiciary follows below.

The Kansas Legislature opened the 2026 session with two joint meetings of the House and Senate, setting the framework for debate over the state's priorities.

Gov. Kelly delivered her eighth and final State of the State, highlighting bipartisan economic development efforts and more than $30 billion in private investments across Kansas.

She also outlined her fiscal year 2027 budget proposal, a $10.8-billion plan built on projected 1.7% revenue growth. The proposal continues full funding of K-12 education for the eighth consecutive year, includes $50.6 million in additional special education aid, and eliminates co-pays for reduced-price school meals for more than 34,000 students. The budget further prioritizes expanded mental health services, development of a 10-year statewide water strategy, and a 2.5% pay adjustment for qualifying state employees.

Governor's FY 2027 Budget Overview

House Speaker Dan Hawkins (R-Wichita) delivered the Republican response, emphasizing continued tax relief, including the elimination of the state sales tax on groceries, reduced income tax rates, and the repeal of state-level property taxes. He said further property tax reductions would remain a key focus, along with fiscal discipline and efficiency in government.

Kansas Supreme Court Chief Justice Eric Rosen also delivered his first State of the Judiciary, urging lawmakers to invest $1.5 million to stabilize specialty courts and warning that some Kansas counties now have no practicing attorneys. He also encouraged action on SB 214 to strengthen the rural legal workforce and preserve access to justice statewide.

Together, these addresses frame the policy debates that will shape the session ahead.
