

KANSAS LEGISLATIVE INSIGHTS NEWSLETTER | FEBRUARY 16, 2026

By: C. Edward Watson II, Susan Peterson PhD, and Eric L. Sexton PhD

TURNAROUND APPROACHES: DEADLINES, DECISIONS, AND LEGISLATIVE DIRECTION

The Kansas Legislature is nearing turnaround, the midpoint of the 2026 session. Committee work will conclude Monday, Feb. 16, and Thursday, Feb. 19, will serve as the deadline for non-exempt bills to be considered in their chamber of origin.

This session, lawmakers introduced 779 House bills and 509 Senate bills. After turnaround, hundreds of those measures will effectively be finished for the year. Attention will shift decisively from committee hearings to debate on the House and Senate floors in the upcoming week, where priorities become clearer and legislative momentum takes shape.

Last week marked the final push before the deadline. Lawmakers moved quickly to position bills for floor debate, signaling which proposals carry support and which face steeper hurdles. Election policy and landlord-tenant measures remained active topics of discussion, though related proposals had not advanced as the week concluded.

ELECTION BILLS REFLECT A SESSION FOCUSED ON CLARITY AND PROCEDURE

Several election-related bills received hearings this session. While most remain in committee, the discussions offer insight into how lawmakers are approaching election policy. Rather than sweeping changes, much of the focus has been on tightening procedures, clarifying statutory language, and responding to concerns about administration and public confidence.

HB 2023 would create the crime of interference with an election official. Committee testimony describes the bill as establishing a felony offense for intimidation, threats, coercion, or attempts to impede or retaliate against election officials. The Secretary of State's office testified in support, citing documented harassment of election workers and emphasizing deterrence. Opponent testimony questioned whether existing criminal statutes already address such conduct and raised concerns about statutory scope.

HB 2056 addresses candidate nomination procedures and certain election crimes. According to committee testimony, the proposal followed issues observed during the 2024 election cycle, including nominations filed without a candidate's consent and the use of multiple nomination pathways. The bill would require a notarized acceptance of nomination and limit overlapping nomination avenues. Supporters characterized the changes as technical clarifications intended to reduce disputes and improve ballot certainty.

HB 2448 would require citizenship status to appear on driver's licenses. For voting purposes, individuals whose licenses list them as non-citizens would cast provisional ballots if they claim citizenship. In testimony, a representative of the Secretary of State's office stated that non-citizen voting prosecutions in Kansas are rare, citing two cases, with 10 additional cases under investigation. The bill passed the House 77-41 and now moves to the Senate.

SB 394 addresses advance mail ballot verification procedures. The bill provides that if a court rules the signature verification requirement unconstitutional or blocks it in a final, non-appealable order, the advance mail-balloting statute would be repealed. Supporters, including the Secretary of State's office, testified the measure clarifies legislative intent that signature verification is integral to the mail-balloting framework and cannot be severed. The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee recommended the bill for passage.

SB 310 regulates cryptocurrency campaign contributions. Testimony outlined requirements for U.S.-based, federally registered processors, know-your-customer standards, and prompt conversion of digital assets to U.S. currency. Discussion centered on transparency and compliance.

Taken together, the hearings reflect a session largely focused on statutory clarity and enforcement standards. Many proposals refine procedures and address administrative concerns. At the same time, measures such as SB 394 demonstrate that more fundamental questions about the structure of election law remain part of the legislative debate.

LANDLORD-TENANT LEGISLATION ADVANCES ON MULTIPLE FRONTS

Housing policy has become a focal point of the 2026 legislative session. Lawmakers are advancing several distinct bills that amend different sections of the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. Although the measures are not formally linked, they reflect competing views on property rights, tenant protections, and municipal authority.

HB 2504 and SB 391 would preempt local ordinances that prohibit landlords from declining to accept tenants solely because of source of income, including participation in federal rental assistance programs. The proposals follow adoption of such an ordinance in Lawrence and related litigation. Supporters, including housing industry representatives, argue the bills promote statewide uniformity and protect landlord discretion. Opponents contend the measures limit municipal home rule and reduce locally adopted tenant protections.

HB 2454 and HB 2768 address rent payment and qualification standards. The bills would require landlords to accept multiple or partial rent payments if the total rent is paid in full and on time. They would also require income-screening policies to consider lawful income sources. Supporters describe the changes as increasing flexibility for working households. Landlord organizations caution that revised payment structures may increase administrative and financial risk. Enforcement would occur through existing civil liability or consumer protection provisions.

HB 2634 concerns maintenance obligations. In jurisdictions without an adopted property maintenance code, the bill would apply the 2012 International Property Maintenance Code as a baseline standard. Proponents characterize the bill as clarifying an existing statutory duty. Landlord groups have raised implementation questions but have not uniformly opposed the measure.

SB 485 proposes procedural changes to eviction actions, including mediation requirements and expanded record sealing. Supporters view the reforms as enhancing tenant stability. Property owners have expressed concern about additional compliance burdens.

Together, the proposals illustrate continued legislative attention to the balance between statewide consistency, local authority, landlord discretion, and tenant stability in a changing housing market.
