

SERVING AND PROTECTING OUR CLIENTS AND COMMUNITIES DURING COVID-19

March 16, 2020

To our Foulston clients, friends of the firm, and the communities we serve:

Foulston Siefkin LLP will continue to serve our clients' legal needs through the evolving coronavirus (COVID-19) challenges, while following CDC guidelines to protect you as well as our Foulston team and the communities where we live and work. We remain committed to providing the same top-notch legal counsel and excellent client service we strive to deliver every day.

In a rapidly changing environment, you may have more legal questions and concerns than ever. Please know we'll be here to help. You can reach us by phone or email as always, and our offices will remain open as long as we can safeguard the health of our visitors and team members. Our technology allows remote work with full access to resources used to advise clients.

Foulston is carefully monitoring the ongoing COVID-19 developments; visit our website here for our alerts and updates related to the virus and its impact on organizations' responsibilities, as well as updates on Foulston events.

For more than 100 years, our priority has been to do what's right for our clients. We remain committed to that guiding principle, especially when our clients may need us most.

-Kevin J. Amel, Managing Partner
