PROFILE

Emily Matta is an associate with Foulston's litigation practice group in the firm's Wichita office. She represents businesses and individuals in federal and state courts, handling employment disputes, complex business disputes, insurance defense, and personal injury cases.

Within labor and employment, Emily has defended clients against complaints of harassment, discrimination, and retaliation in EEOC and state agency proceedings, in unemployment appeals, and in employment-related litigation. She also works with educational institutions on matters including disciplinary responses and Title VI discrimination.

Before she attended law school, Emily held every position from dishwasher to manager at her family's restaurant in Wichita. Growing up in a small business family, Emily understands the legal landscape is complex and intimidating to navigate. She strives to demystify the law for her clients and to understand her client's businesses and unique needs so she can deliver effective, timely, and practical representation. Outside of work, Emily enjoys reading historical non-fiction, shooting archery, and traveling through Kansas. She is a proud, self-labeled "Kansas history nerd" and has visited nearly every corner of the state, enthusing over historic sites and lesser-known roadside attractions. Most recently, Emily visited the Dalton Defenders Museum in Meade, Monument Rocks in Gove County, and Little Jerusalem Badlands State Park in Logan County.
