PROFILE

Tara Eberline serves as partner-in-charge of Foulston's Kansas City office. As an employment defense attorney, Tara helps employers of all sizes navigate the ever-changing field of employment law. She advises cities and counties, business owners, managers, general counsel, and human resources professionals on complex workplace challenges at all stages of the employment relationship. Tara is a trusted resource for strategic and lawful decisions regarding potential, current, and former employee issues of all kinds.

When disputes arise, Tara represents her clients before state and federal agencies and defends clients in matters involving workplace harassment, discrimination, retaliation, and other employment-related lawsuits. Tara has also successfully represented both employers and employees in sensitive and often fast-moving disputes regarding non-compete and non-solicitation agreements. In this evolving area of the law, Tara provides her clients with both legal and practical advice and tailors her negotiation and litigation strategy to reach her clients' business goals.

Tara is frequently invited to speak about employment law-related topics for local chambers of commerce, associations, and other civic groups. She has spoken on an array of topics of interest to human-resources professionals, including the benefits and challenges of social media in the workplace and the proper classification of employees and independent contractors. Tara was recognized in 2023 and 2025 by Best Lawyers® as the Employment Law – Management "Lawyer of the Year" in the Kansas City, Kansas area; and the 2025 Kansas City, Kansas area Litigation - Municipal "Lawyer of the Year."

Outside of her law practice, Tara stays busy baking with her three children, traveling with her husband, and volunteering throughout the Kansas City community.
